

weninger

Dear Winefriends,

Taking advantages on this unusually warm January and February, the Weninger team deals with the pruning of the vines.

In the cellar there is a lot to do, as we realised that the natural way of making the malolactic fermentation takes more time, so we are just getting to its end in the case of a couple of our new wines.

The biodynamic way of farming at Weninger Winery

After two years of biological farming, we have changed to biodynamic way in 2006 at our Balf vineyards. This is the most complex way of biological farming. The changing needs more care and work of course without shadow of a doubt in the vineyard. This means we do not use pesticides and herbicides. Instead of using artificial nutrition we apply 35 tons per hectare of compost, which made of horse and cow dung and reed from the bank of the Lake Fertő (Neusiedl)

With this method the terroir of our vines will be more represented.
